

Legal Aid – how eligibility is calculated

It may be worth you doing some rough calculations yourself to see if you might qualify for legal aid. If you do want to go ahead with our service, we will need the documents listed on Pages 2 or 3, of this leaflet before we meet with you.

You will automatically qualify if you receive what is termed a “passported benefit” i.e. Income Support, income-based Job Seeker’s Allowance, Income related Employment and Support Allowance, Guaranteed Pension Credit or Universal Credit.

Otherwise you need to add up all of your income from any source and then take off various allowances.

The main allowable expenditure is £298.08 per child (if living with you), £185.54 for any partner living with you, housing costs which are rent or mortgage only (minus any Housing Benefit, and capped at £545 if no children living with you), child care costs associated with work, any child support payments you are making, and a standard employment allowance of £45.

If you want to do some rough calculations yourself you would essentially:-

- a. Add up all your income on a monthly basis (pay, tax credits, child support payments, child benefit) for you and your partner if living together
- b. Your combined gross income needs to be £2657 or less
- c. Then take off allowances as listed above, including tax and national insurance paid and see if this is £733 or less per month

You also need to have savings of less than £8,000.

If you think you do qualify then we would need you to send in the documents listed on the following table. We must have these documents before we can set up a free initial meeting.

Documents can be:

- emailed to admin@childrenfirstfamilymediation.org.uk

To help us process your application as quickly as possible, please mark your correspondence “Legal Aid proof”
